TWENTY-FIFTH YEAR

GETTYSBURG, PA., FRIDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 8th, 1929.

Borough Tax Rate is Increased One Mill; To Repeal Ordinance

Additional Revenue Required To Pay Special Fund Loan Of $15,200 And Other Additional Expenses; 12-Mill Rate For General Purposes Remains Unchanged.

By unanimous vote of the entire councilmanic body, one mill was added to the borough's four-mill special tax rate, but the 12 mill rate for general purposes was unchanged at the February meeting of council at the engine house, Thursday evening.

C. E. Tawney, chairman of council's finance committee, presented the nine councilmen with figures, indicating that the borough's needs in 1929 for special purposes would require approximately $24,000. From this levy for special purposes, council pays maturing bonds and interest charges.

The assessed valuation of Gettysburg for this year is $2,858,671, according to figures prepared by Councilman Tawney, and with a special tax of five mills, the borough's income will be approximately $14,293. The first thought in the minds of the other councilmen after Mr. Tawney announced the income from a five-mill special tax was that the revenue thus secured would be insufficient to pay a special fund loan of $15,200, due the Gettysburg National bank, and that in addition to estimated expenditures of approximately $9,000 for bond retirements and interest payments during 1929.

Discuss 6-Mill Rate

Several of the councilmen expressed the opinion that the special tax rate should be raised to six mills, which would bring in $17,152, and sentiment for a boost of two mills was apparent in certain sections of council. Councilman W. I. Oyler said he could see no special reason for the two-mill boost, pointing out that the borough's debt was being reduced in satisfactory proportions each year and that there was no special need to lop off so much of the special fund debt in one year as might be accomplished by a six-mill rate.

Councilman Tawney pointed out that the 1928 audit showed conclusively that Gettysburg last year reduced its liabilities more than $6,000, which, he said, was a sign of a healthy financial condition.

Mr. Tawney asserted that the borough was placed in financial straits by the extra cost of building the sewage disposal plant, over and above the amount for which bonds were issued, the paving of West Middle street and the installation of a heating plant at the engine house.

Urges Economy

He said that if council continues to practice rigid economy this year, and has a balance remaining in the general fund at the end of 1929, money can be turned into the special fund to reduce the indebtedness. In making up the budget for 1929, Mr. Tawney called upon the various committee chairmen to ask for no more funds than they will legitimately need.

After the vote on the tax increase was taken, council voted unanimously to instruct the ordinance committee to draft a measure repealing the present ordinance which remits to property owners one-third of the cost of installing curbs and water tables in the hope of effecting a saving of more than $1,000 annually. Along with that ordinance, a measure will be presented at the March meeting increasing the fees of hucksters at curb market.

The 12-mill general tax rate will net council more than a thousand dollars in taxes this year because of the increase in the assessed valuation of Gettysburg property since last year. In 1928, council received $33,259 from general taxes, and the estimated sum for 1929 will be $34,304.

Renews Insurance

Council renewed its liability insurance policies covering firemen and borough employes.

Robert Eisiminger, maintenance superintendent for the state highway department in Adams county, appeared before council, asking it if snow plows should keep the streets of Gettysburg free of snow this winter. He said Street Commissioner Augustus Tawney notified him after the heavy snow several weeks ago not to shovel the snow off the streets. By a unanimous vote, council over-ruled the street commissioner, and thanked Mr. Eisiminger for his interest in keeping the borough streets free of snow.

Council voted to ask the Gettysburg water company to replace the fire hydrant at the corner of York and Stratton streets wih a larger, three-way plug.

EYE TEST FOR DRIVERS URGED

90 Per Cent Pass Recent Tests Given By Highway Patrol; Some Color Blind.

Tests for visual acuity by State Highway Patrolmen recently indicate that 90 per cent of those who submitted had fairly good vision for driving, the Pennsylvania Department of Highways announced. A standard chart and conventional appliances were used under the direction of the State Board of Optometrical Examiners, which made the analysis of examination reports compiled by patrolmen.

Experimental Tests

Arrangements for the tests, which were experimental and calculated to give motor car drivers an idea of the worth of the proposed legal visual requirements of all drivers was made by the optometrical board as a part of the Highway Department exhibit at the show. Several hundred persons voluntarily submitted to the test.

A standard illuminated chart was used at twenty feet, each eye examined individually, and then both. A color test of the standard tints used in traffic signals revealed one person "green blind."

"Field of Vision"

The "field of vision" test determined the angle at which persons could see objects at one side, the idea being that drivers should be able to see vehicles aproaching from the rear, in the corner of the eye, and thus be ready to avoid accident. The minimum requirement was 140 degrees. Seven persons failed to attain the passing mark for field vision.

Reporting its analysis, the examining board called attention to the natural tendency of drivers, uncertain of their vision, to refuse to submit to the test when it is not a legal requirement. The board expressed belief that compulsory examinations would reveal a "large number of persons unable to meet the ratings."

ANTICIPATE LARGE CROWD HERE IN JUNE

Indications Are That June Encampment Will Attract More Than 4,000.

The executive committee of the committee on arrangements for the June encampment of the G. A. R. and allied organizations to be held here, and members of the cooperating committee of the Chamber of Commerce held a dinner meeting at the Hotel Gettysburg Thursday night.

Reports of prospective attendance indicated that the estimates of attendance will be exceeded. The committee has estimated the attendance at between 3000 and 4000 people. Indications are that the Reserves alone will make up one-fourth of that number, while their families and friends lodging in town will largely increase the group.

Other Conventions

Six other conventions will be in session at the same time, with attendance at the several places running in some cases as high as 500 or more. The various organizations show an unusual enthhusiasm about the coming meeting.

Convention halls definitely fixed are: G. A. R., court house; Woman's Relief Corps, Brua Chapel; Ladies of the G. A. R., College church; Sons of Veterans, Xavier Hall. Meeting places for the Daughters of Veterans and the Sons of Veterans Auxiliary have been only tentatively selected, and will be announced later.

About 75 rooms have been reserved for the officers of the various organizations at headquarters, and the Battlefield hotel has been reserved in its entirety for the veterans of Allentown. Individual requests for reservations are being received.

$3000 Is Needed

In the assignment of persons to hotels and lodging houses, preference will be given to those places which subscribe to the expenses of entertaining the encampments. A fund of $3,000 will be required.

Those present at Thursday night's conference were: E. F. Strausbaugh, the Rev. L. B. Hafer and O. G. McPherson, of the Sons of Veterans, and E. W. Thomas, C. A. Bixler, W. A. Miller, R. B. Funkhouser, John W. Brehm and David Blocher, of the Chamber of Commerce.

School Safety Patrols Guide Kiddies to Prevent Accidents

Announcement that the Pennsylvania Department of Justice has ruled "school safety patrols" illegal is not only misleading but is distinctly harmful to one of the greatest movements for child safety ever undertaken in the Commonwealth, according to Edward P. Curran, Safety Director of the Keystone Automobile Club.

"What the Department of Justice ruled," said Mr. Curran, "is that safety patrol members have no right to regulate traffic. Properly conducted patrols never undertake this distinctly police function. The patrols are stationed on the sidewalks to guard against pupils darting into the street in the face of oncoming traffic. The duty of the members is to prevent accidents through control of their fellows—not through the regulation of traffic, for which they have not qualification, legal or otherwise.

"These patrols have been formed with the approval and commendation of the Pennsylvania Department of Public Instruction. The most firmly impressed upon members, in every instance, is that in no circumstances are they to attempt the regulation of vehicular traffic."

GOOD ROADS ARE IMPORTANT ITEM

Governor Fisher Declares Matter Is Most Vital Before Present Legislature.

Harrisburg, Feb. 8 (AP).—Construction and improvement of Pennsylvania highways was described by Governor Fisher as the "most vital matter to come before the legislature."

He took occasion to state again that the general assembly must assume responsibility for the highway program for the next two years and make provisions for adequate revenue to continue the building of roads.

The question of a four cent tax on gas was not discussed at a conference in the executive mansion last night.

"There is more interest in highways than in any other proposition that can possibly come before the legislature," the governor said. "This is manifest by the many bills already introduced, adding many more miles to the state system. There is an incessant hammering at the secretary of highways and at the governor for improvement of the present system.

"The attention of the legislature has been called to some of the most pressing demands such as rural aid, bridges, city streets and reconstruction of earlier portions of the system which are breaking down under modern traffic. The whole subject involves large construction problems which will have to be dealt with by the general assembly."

EDWIN DENBY, 59, EXPIRES TODAY

Former Secretary Of Navy Dies Suddenly From Heart Attack This Morning.

Detroit, Feb. 8 (AP).—Edwin Denby, former secretary of the navy and one of the figures whose political career was abruptly terminated by the Teapot Dome scandal, died at his home here this morning. Death resulted from a heart attack.

Denby, one of the most popular figures in public life at the time of the oil scandal, was 59 years old. While he had been in poor health during recent weeks, announcement of his death this morning was a distinct shock to his friends here.

Following his resignation from the cabinet Mr. Denby returned to Detroit and resumed his banking, industrial and legal activities.

Denby arose as usual shortly before eight o'clock this morning but complained of feeling ill. A physician was summoned but before he could arrive the former navy secretary was dead.

LARGE CROWD ENJOYS LEGION SPANISH MOON

Capacity House Greets Annual American Legion Play Thursday.

Life during a busy day in New York likened to a romantic night in Spain was ably portrayed by the cast of "Spanish Moon" in the Majestic theatre Thursday night. An audience of more than 1,000 filled the theatre to see the annual American Legion production.

Credit for the success of the play is not only due to the cast of characters, but also to the several choruses that assisted with some of the musical numbers. The ladies and gentlemen of the ensemble, numbering about 55, added color and pep to the play through their colorful costumes and special dancing. Miss Jeanne Knox and Elwood Myers presented an interpretation of the Spanish tango.

Leading Characters

Fred Pfeffer as "Howard Boynton," a business man with a sense of humor, spent most of his time trying to keep his employer, "Lawrence Austin," on speaking terms with his fiancee, "Claire Lewis," played by Mrs. Grace Myers. Joseph Sutton cast in the role of "Lawrence Austin" sang several solos during the performance that were well received. However, as no business house is complete without its office boy and stenographer, "Spanish Moon," offered G. W. Banes and Miss Dorothy Gilbert in these roles.

Acting as typically as the title "a romantic English poet" might suggest, G. N. Waters did his best to alienate the affections of "Claire Lewis" by his breathtaking and astounding poetry. In the character of "Flash," played by Robert Codori, the fast working janitor, there was portrayed the kind of job that begets laziness because of the want of more things to do.

The Legion committee in charge of arrangements was William Eckenrode, J. Frank Stokes, H. T. Jennings, John Butt, Charles W. Myers, A. R. Jones, Leroy Winebrenner, William G. Weaver, Lawrence Oyler, Fred Pfeffer and Fred Haehnlen.

Couple Marries After Courtship Of only 24 Hours

Following an intensive courtship of twenty-four hours, Miss Sarah Elizabeth Strock, of York, and Earl Clinton Groce, of Harrisburg, were married at Dallastown, York county, at 10 o'clock, Thursday evening, less than three hours after they were issued a marriage license by W. A. Geiselman, clerk of the courts, here.

Although Miss Strock, who gave her age as 25 years, and Groce, who said he was 39, had known each other for five years, they had no intentions of marrying each other until Wednesday evening, when Groce "had a date" with the girl who later became his wife.

After their wedding, Mr. and Mrs. Groce came to the Altland hotel, Abbottstown, and left this morning on a honeymoon trip in connection with a business trip of the bridegroom, a traveling salesman.

The O'Neal family here was for many years the heaviest stockholders in the Gettysburg Water company, and Doctor O'Neal was a director in the company for a number of years before he was elected president, May 1, 1905, a position he held until the company was sold in 1927. He succeeded as president the late Jeremiah W. Diehl, father of Mrs. C. C. Bream, East Middle street.

John Tyler, 1841-'45
By Alexander R. George

Washington (AP)—Vice-President John Tyler, Virginia democrat and violin player, was playing "knuckles" with his children at his home in Williamsburg when a messenger who had made the journey from Washington by sailboat notified him of the unexpected death of President William Henry Harrison.

Borrowing money for the trip, Tyler sped to Washington to take the oath of office April 6, 1841, without inaugural ceremony or festivity of any kind. At Brown's hotel, now the Metropolitan, he was sworn in by Judge William Cranch of the circuit court of the District of Columbia.

The nation was in mourning over the death of Harrison, and there was consternation among the Whig politicians at the accession of a Democrat to the presidency. Tyler had been nominated by the Whigs as Harrison's running mate to attract the votes of the "constructionist" democrats, who were opposed to Van Buren. Tyler, however, retained the cabinet of his predecessor and tried to conciliate the national leaders.

Charles Dickens describes his first visit to the White House during the Tyler occupancy:

"We entered a large hall and having twice or thrice rung a bell which nobody answered, walked without further ceremony through the rooms on the ground floor, as divers other gentlemen (mostly with their hats on and their hands in their pockets) were doing very leisurely.

"We looked into a chamber fitted all round with a great bare wooden desk or counter, whereon lay files of newspapers, to which sundry gentlemen were referring. There were some 15 or 20 persons in the room. One, a tall, wiry, muscular old man, from the west, sunburnt and swarthy, with a hat on his knees and a giant umbrella resting between his legs. He sat bolt upright in his chair and twitching the hard lines about his mouth, as if he had made up his mind to 'fix' the president on what he had to say.

"Another, a Kentucky farmer, 6 feet tall, with his hat on and his hands under his coattails, who leaned against the wall and kicked the floor with his heels. A third, an oval faced bilious looking man with sleek black hair cropped close and beard shaved down to blue dots, who sucked the head of a thick stick and from time to time took it out of his mouth to see how it was getting on. A fourth did nothing but whistle. A fifth did nothing but spit.

"We had not waited in this room many minutes before a black messenger appeared and conducted us into another of smaller dimensions, where at a business like table covered with papers sat the president himself.

"He looked somewhat worn and anxious, and well he might, being at war with everybody, but the expression of his face was mild and pleasant and his manner was remarkably unaffected, gentlemanly and agreeable. I thought that in his whole carriage and demeanor he became his station singularly well."

Mrs. Tyler was an invalid and participated but little in the social functions at the White House. The duty of hostess at the executive mansion fell upon Mrs. Robert Tyler, wife of the eldest son, who is described by Mrs. Fremont, a society leader of that time, as "fitted in every way to be the lady of the White House."

Mrs. Freemont writes of a dinner and ball given by the president in honor of the Prince de Joinville, son of King Lopis Philippe of France:

"It was said there was cabinet remonstrance against dancing in the White House as a 'want of dignity,' but Mr. Tyler rightly thought a dance would best please a young navy man and a Frenchman."

SYNOPSIS

Arthur Faunce returns from an Antarctic expedition on which Simon Overton, the leader and Faunce's great friend, was lost. Both men loved Diane, daughter of Judge Herford, but neither had spoken. Faunce now asks Diane to marry him and she accepts, but wants him to make a second expedition. Tortured by his memories, Phoebe finally confesses to Dr. Gerry that Overton was not dead when he left him, but unconscious. Faunce found help and was saved, and later, when they returned for Overton, there was nothing to be found but a trackless waste of snow left by the blizzard. Dr. Gerry is horrified.

"Drink this!" he commanded sharply.

Faunce looked up with glazed eyes, took the cup, and swallowed the narcotic. For a long while afterward he lay there, tossing restlessly.

The doctor sat by the fire, feeding it and listening. After a while he heard the sound of heavy and measured breathing. The narcotic had done its work—the tortured man slept.

He turned back, looked at the sleeper on the lounge and started to go up-stairs. As he did so, he heard some one at the door. Concluding that it must be an early patient, or perhaps a more or less urgent call, he went back, and, opening the door of his study, asked Faunce in. Then he went himself to answer the ring.

The face of Overton arose before her.

On his door-step, muffled in furs, radiant and sparkling, stood Diane Herford. The doctor was guilty of a start of surprise. She saw it and smiled.

"The storm has torn down the wires, and I couldn't phone," she explained. "I want you to come over to breakfast. Papa's not so well."

He was aware of a feeling that was almost panic.

"I can't come over to breakfast, Di," he replied gruffly, drawing her out of the frosty air into the little entry. "I've been up all night, my girl, and I want my own way this morning."

She commiserated him.

"I'm so sorry—what a shame! Of course you must rest. Papa isn't really so ill, only I—I"— she hesitated with a charming smile—"I've got something to tell you!"

He turned a searching look on her.

"Yes?"

"I'm engaged to be married."

She paused, waiting for him to guess her fiancé; but he remained obstinately silent.

"To Authur Faunce," she told him.

The doctor forced himself to hold out both hands to meet hers.

"You want me to congratulate you?" he demanded bruskly. "I shan't! I'm going to congratulate him, instead. That's the way to look at it."

She laughed.

"Papa's pleased, and I'm so glad that he is! But I won't keep you from your rest now. Come over to lunch, instead of breakfast."

She moved toward the door, her eyes smiling at him. There was something about her that seemed, to the doctor, not wholly happy. They were at the door, and he suddenly laid his fatherly hand on her shoulder.

"Diane, do you love him? Are you following your heart?"

She did not answer immediately. Her gaze dwelt on the wide, snowy landscape before them. Then she looked up and an exquisite blush softened her face.

"Yes," she replied slowly, but with an engaging candor. "I couldn't marry for any reason but—I—I'm following my heart."

Diane left Dr. Gerry's house with a feeling that something had happened there—something apart from the commonplace fact that the overworked physician had been up all night.

As she walked homeward she was trying to collect her thoughts, to bring herself fairly face to face with this new crisis in her life, to find the real key to that sudden emotion which had swept her into the arms of Faunce.

The face of Overton, so unlike the face of Faunce, rose before her. The strong, irregular features, the clear, dark-blue eyes under the straight, slightly frowning brows, the decisive mouth and chin—how well she remembered them! Though they lacked Faunce's classic beauty, they possessed an absolute assurance of strength and repose.

Where the more facile and graceful Faunce would break or yield, Overton had exemplified those granite qualities of soul and body that belong by right to the leaders of men. He would always be that to her, Diane thought pensively as she walked more slowly, prolonging her return journey. He would always be a splendid figure at the horizon of her imagination.

If he had not loved her—and perhaps he had not, after all—she could think of him more openly, sure that Faunce would understand. For Faunce had loved him, too. It was that, she remembered with a thrill of relief; it was that which had drawn them together. She could still hear the touching tone in Arthur's fine voice when he paid his tribute to Overton that first night at the dinner, which seemed now so long ago.

"I saw two telegraph-poles down," Diane began as she and the judge sat down to breakfast. "The drifts have completely filled the hollow below Skerry's Hill."

The judge looked up sharply from his breakfast.

"Faunce had to cross that bridge, I wonder if he got home all right!"

She was a little startled, and then she smiled reassuringly.

"Why, of course, papa! It was early when he left. It was only snowing a little then; don't you remember?"

"How did I know?" her father retorted with something like a growl. "This lumbago keeps me doubled up like a jack-in-the-box! By the way, Di, where's the newspaper?"

"It hasn't come; I suppose the trains are stalled. They said something about trouble on the line between here and New York. When I was passing Sidney's, on my way this morning, I heard the men talking at the door. You had last night's paper, papa, didn't you?"

"As if I wanted stale news!" he retorted, going on with his breakfast. "I saw something about the English expedition returning from the antarctic. They must have had some delays, but they'll crow over the venture, I suppose. They seem to have made good. If only Overton had lived!"

She pushed her plate aside, though she had scarcely tasted her food, and clasped her hands on the edge of the table, suddenly aware that her fingers were not quite steady.

"I didn't notice the article. What did it say? I'm sure, quite sure, that Arthur did all he could to finish the work, even after—their fearful loss."

"Very likely he did, my dear; but if these Englishmen get ahead of him—steal a march on him, as it were—he hasn't won much. I saw there would be a great reception for them in London. There's nothing but disappointment in that polar business. I want Faunce to give it up. I'll put him in politics here."

She looked thoughtfully across the table at her father's gray head, his massive face, and his keen eyes bent on the table, while his strong hands plied his knife and fork.

"I'd rather you didn't papa," she said quietly. "I want him to go on—to finish the work he's begun. He's put his hand to the plow, as it were, and he mustn't turn back."

Herford again looked up sharply.

"That's a strange sentiment from a girl who's supposed to be in love! Don't you know it's a terrible risk for a man? Have you forgotten Overton so soon?"

She rose from the table and went to the window, standing there, looking out.

"I shall never forget him," she replied without looking at her father. "I remember so well what he was, what he did, what he surely would have become had he lived, that I don't want Arthur to remain in his shadow, to be so much less than he was."

The judge strummed on the table with his fingers. His lumbago was rending him to the point of incivility.

"But you're sending him to the pole to die as Overton died, without reaping any reward but—death."

Will Move Into New Building.—Finding their present quarters too small to enable them to handle an ever increasing business the Gettysburg Times and Adams County News will move April 1st into new quarters on the Square. A building will be erected by Mr. Eckert on a lot north of the present dwelling, especially for the use of The Times and News, and will be equipped with every facility of an up to date newspaper and printing plant.

The feature of the new building will be the fact that it will be practically fire proof and that it will have an abundance of light. The structure will be of galvanised iron, lined, and will have numerous sky lights in addition to a liberal supply of windows.

TODAY'S TALK

By GEORGE MATTHEWS ADAMS

YES, I LOVE DOGS!

I SHALL never tire of rendering tribute to the dog. But there are dogs and dogs. And there are places and places where dogs should not be found.

I love dogs—but not in the hotel room next to mine while I spend the evening reading Keats or Shelley, or doing my best to be friendly to the little blue typewriter as I attempt another week of "Today's Talks." Last night we were entertained until nearly morning with the howling of a dog in the room next door!

Finally we could stand it no longer and went to the manager and asked him whether the place in which we were staying was a hotel or a dog kennel. He hemmed and hawed and finally had to admit that he was compelled to take in dogs as well as human beings—because he had to make a living—and besides, "what am I to do when all the Park Avenue hotels allow ladies with their dogs? We try to keep our dog guests to the minimum number!" I thanked him, but tomorrow I shall move.

One evening alone at my hotel I met four ladies with dogs and nearly stepped on one little fellow, about nine inches long, as I entered my elevator.

Perhaps it is the dog question that has raised the rates of our hotel rooms. I never thought of that before.

I do not blame the dogs. They must think that they are rising in the world when they can have a nice hotel room in which to sleep. Perhaps it might be a good suggestion to hotel owners to label their floors the Pekinese, Pomeranian, Chihuahua floors. Just so that we tired business men might select floors not inhabited by dogs and be able to occupy rooms not previously tenanted by some rare and costly Schipperke.

I may be all wrong about this and grossly unjust to these dumb creatures who follow where they are led, but it does seem that human rights in many places are losing their former standing.

Hotel managers are being intimated by dog owners! I have the memory, however, freshly held, of one New York place, widely known as "Dinty Moore's," where a fashionably gowned woman with dog was refused admittance—indignant as she appeared. Yet people keep crowding this famous place. Maybe it is because they never fail to serve good "corn beef and cabbage," "smoked ham and—" in there.

I know of fine hotels that do not need the "dog patronage!"

Just Folks

LINES AFTER A DREARY DRAMA

I sat me through a dreary play,
Built up without a smile,
In which no one was heard to say
A single word worth while.
Through several acts a woman whined
That happiness she couldn't find,
A woman selfish, sordid, mean,
Willful and woefully unclean.

This right to happiness, thought I,
Which dramatists exclaim
And fancy no law should deny
And no man dare to blame,
This tragical and threat-bare theme
Appears to me a moron's dream,
The idea being that one should be
From every law and duty free.

One should be happy, though he kill
The dearest friend he knows,
One should not know one moment ill,
Or pay one debt he owes.
Women their husbands should betray
If but their minds shall run that way.
Life owes no duty, be it said
Either to living or to dead.

I shed no tears that dreary night
O'er such a woman's pain,
I had no pity for her plight,
Save thinking her insane.
And when I quit that place, I said:
"Sob on, old girl, until you're dead!
If you've a right to happiness
Then life would be a sordid mess."

Dog Hill Paragrafs

By GEORGE BINGHAM

There was some kind of a paid health agent visited the Wild Onion School Wednesday of this week, and talked on health. The teacher announced all they had been doing so far was to eat plenty of onions and jump lots of gullies.

Wash Hocks says his wife is disappointed. She was told the flu was coming, and would visit their home and she washed up everything, scrubbed the floors, fixed up the house for extra company, got down all the extra quilts and blankets out of the loft, cracked a lot of hickory nuts, set out the best chair for the preacher, put on the scalloped pillow slips, set all the mouse traps, dusted off the Bible, and boiled two roosters, and then, after all of that nobody never so much as sneezed, which gave her time to take care of her neighbors.

Helped at Change of Life

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a wonderful medicine at the Change of Life. I would get blue spells and just walk the floor. I was nervous, could not sleep at night, and was not able to do my work. I know if it had not been for your medicine I would have been in bed most of this time and had a big doctor's bill. If women would only take your medicine they would be better."—Mrs. Anna Weaver, R. F. D. No. 2, Rose Hill, Iowa.

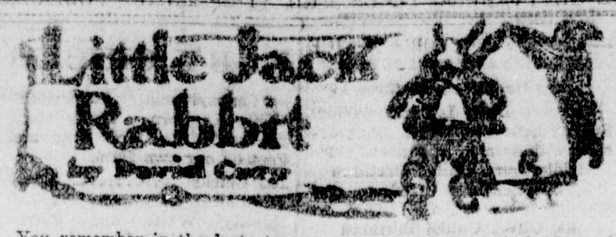
is a Prescription for Colds, Grippe, Flu, Dengue, Bilious Fever and Malaria. It is the most speedy remedy known.



You remember in the last story that we left Little Jack Rabbit in faraway China. Well, as he and his newly found friend, Tee Sin, the Chinese boy, rode on the great farm buffalo toward Tee Sin's humble thatched roof cottage, the little bunny gazed in wonder at the fields of flaming poppy flowers in full bloom, spreading like a great red carpet all about the shabby little gray house.

To the little rabbit this newly found country seemed almost like a flower garden, for beyond the poppy fields grew other flowers in wild profusion; fragrant pink clover, yellow rape, golden buttercups and beneath an old bridge red geraniums, forgetmenots and wild roses, crimson and pink, white and yellow.

As the great farm buffalo drew near the thatched roof cottage, Tee Sin turned him to one side and halting beside a lovely blue blossomed kiri shrub, pointed to a huge bunch of evergreen that hung above the door "Until my baby brother is a month old no one but my mother's nurse may enter our house. That is why the branch of fir is hung above the door."

By and by, when Tee Sin grew tired of showing the little rabbit how well he could fly a kite, for Chinese boys are as skillful as the Japanese in kite flying, he led his bunny friend down the hill, past hawthorne trees growing in little clumps at the edge of the road, where sweet throated cuckoos sang so merrily, to a small thatched roof cottage on the bank of a good sized pound. Nearby stood a low roofed hut in which Oyama and his old lame father kept many ducks.

beat down fiercely, the eggs were spread upon the floor to hatch. In due time the little ducklings pecked their way out of the shells and waddled to the pond for their first swim.

"Look in," whispered Tee Sin, and peeping in at the doorway, the little rabbit chuckled to see how carefully each egg was wrapped in a coarse napkin and laid upon the the floor. You see, at home in dear Rabbitland, Mrs. Duck at the farmyard always sat upon her eggs to warm them.

Pretty soon the little rabbit remembered that the Stork had cautioned him to be sure to return to the Magic Boat before nightfall. Perhaps the little bunny hight have missed his way had not Tee Sin kindly showed him the road to the seashore. The Magic Boat was still bobbing slowly up and down in the water close to the sandy beach.

"Goodbye, Tee Sin," cried the little buny, "I wish I might stay with you, but my Magic Boat will leave at sundown whether I am aboard or not. So I must go. Goodbye," and with a wave of his paw, the little rabbit hopped aboard. Away went the magic craft, sped onward by the evening breeze. From the shore came the voice of Tee Sin, fainter and fainter, as further and further away sped the boat, "Come again, little rabbit! come again, little bunny!"

Sweet and low, sweet and low,
The mermaids sing in the sea below,
And Little Jack Rabbit, you must go
Wherever the Magic Boat wills, you know.
